

MOTHER OF WOMAN IN FURNACE THINKS HER SUICIDE

MANY CREDITORS STERLING LAWYER MAY LOSE CLAIMS

Unusual Situation Presented in Wolfersberger Estate.

That only preferred claims against the estate of Aaron A. Wolfersberger of Sterling, Ill., will be paid by the Whiteside County Court, can be liquidated is the belief of many former clients of the well known attorney, whose holdings, it was announced yesterday, would be at least $100,000 short of the amount of indebtedness.

While Attorney John M. Stager, partner of the deceased attorney, who has been investigating preparatory to filing a report with the Probate Court, would neither admit or deny such a statement, those who are in a position to know something of the affairs of the late lawyer-finance maintain that those preferred claims—largely claims of estates which Mr. Wolfersberger was handling—will consume up about all that can be realized on the seventy odd pieces of real estate owned by him, all of which it is said, were very heavily mortgaged, some beyond its real value.

While it has been generally known in Sterling for several months that the Wolfersberger financial affairs were in a badly tangled condition, the announcement by Mr. Stager that the shortage would be at least $100,000 has created a sensation in that city and vicinity. It is said that many clients, some of them widows, will lose practically all of their money entrusted to him.

Was Popular Man.

Wolfersberger died May 23, last, after enjoying a position of unusual trust for many years. He was born in Jordan township, Whiteside county, March 22, 1856, his parents having made the trip to that county from the east behind a yoke of oxen. He was educated in Carthage college, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Business College and Union College of Law, Chicago, from which he graduated in 1879, in which year he was admitted to the bar.

He served seven years as city attorney of Sterling and in 1890 was elected County Judge of Whiteside county, being the only democratic candidate ever elected to that office. He served with distinction and when he voluntarily retired from the office he was sought by many clients to handle estate matters. In such a capacity he soon developed a great business as a money-lender and was so trusted by many of his clients that their money was entrusted to him without security.

He was married Nov. 4, 1880, his wife passing away in February, 1921. A daughter, Lella, who is well known in Dixon, and a son, John J., of Colorado survive.

Crash Died of Worry.

Disenchantment of the lawyer's books was hampered considerably by the sudden death, a few weeks after her employer, of Mrs. Anna Zandt Bishop, who had been his confidential clerk and stenographer for many years. Overwork in her efforts to bring order out of the chaos she is said to have found in the attorney's books was thought to have caused her death.

She was found dead in her home, where she lived alone by neighbors, and it was evident she had been taken in the night, had arisen and unlocked the door and had fallen dead on the floor. A coroner's jury found her death to have resulted from apoplexy.

Security Insufficient.

Clients, who have investigated, say that it has been shown that Wolfersberger had made many loans of money entrusted to him on insufficient security; had issued several mortgages on individual pieces of property owned by him, of which there are about seventy, in many of which the loans were far in excess of the value of the property; and that in some cases he had neglected to credit to his clients moneys paid to him in liquidation of certain mortgages he had negotiated and given clients as security for their cash.

The creditors have shown a disposition to allow the estate to be settled up without crowding or forcing of sales, and the chance to save anything by advantageous sales is made greater by this act on the part of creditors. There are approximately one hundred creditors.

Attorney Stager has worked day and night on the estate's affairs and believes he has most of the accounts against the estate on record now, but his claims have been put in that are indisputable and of which there was no record in the lawyer's books, it is not known how many other claims there may be outstanding. The fact that records were not kept of many of these outstanding obligations leads to the opinion that Judge Wolfersberger did not realize the amount of his debts. Another fact that leads to the same opinion is that the will, which was probated some time ago, left $20,000 to the daughter and provided that the balance be divided equally between the son and daughter. It does not seem possible that such a will would have been made if it had been known that the estate was insolvent and there would be neither money nor property to leave to the heirs.

While it was known that he had been suffering from the affliction which claimed his life so suddenly this morning, for several weeks and had been under the constant care of a physician, it was not thought that his condition was serious. ## RAILWAYS, HIGHWAYS AND WATERWAYS IN ONE WAY

That's What President Grain Marketing Co. of Chicago Wants.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Evansville, Ind., Nov. 20.—Railways and waterways must be interlocked and co-related and to them must be joined up the highways if that great necessity—greater capacity and lower tariffs in transportation—is to be realized in time to be of greatest help, Gray Silver, president of the Grain Marketing Company of Chicago, told the sixth annual convention of the Mississippi Valley Association in convention today.

"The volume of traffic carried by railways doubles every ten years," Mr. Silver said. "Transportation must be greater in capacity and lower in tariffs to meet increasing farm costs. In all his cooperative marketing efforts the farmer faces problems of excessive transportation costs."

"But even so, there are limits beyond which railway capacity cannot go."

Must Return to Waterways

"Therefore we must go back to the waterways. We shall need every water route that our engineers can give us at reasonable investment costs an efficiency. The Mississippi river must be canalized from Minneapolis southward; the Missouri must be conquered clear back to the Dakotas; the Great Lakes must be connected with the Mississippi and this great waterway opened to ocean going vessels."

"But we must have a complete and interlocking system of highways for the movement of goods from farm to the primary market; of railways from such markets to the waterways and all-year channels of those waterways to the sea."

Mr. Silver not only said rail traffic and water navigation must go hand in hand but that water navigation and water power must also cooperate to help the farmers and that this help will in turn help every citizen.

Mr. Silver assured the delegates that the farmers of the country stood behind and would support all of the pending waterway bills in congress and that they advocated an appropriation of one million dollars for a survey of the entire navigation and power possibilities of all our streams and rivers.

H. W. Seamen of Clinton, Iowa, told the delegates that the extension of the government-owned barge line is now feasible north of St. Louis if suitable equipment can be purchased. Other speakers at today's session were Senator J. A. Reed of Missouri and Oscar Barrett of Cincinnati, president of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association.

Dunaway Iowa Girls are Found in Dixon this A. M.

Deputy Sheriff Hess of Maquoketa, Iowa, and officers of that city combed a chase of two days over about 30 miles of country at noon today, when Sheriff Elliot C. Hixley took in custody Ruth Sink and Elizabeth Rabe, who were said to have run away from their homes at Maquoketa the first of the week. The girls were at the north end of the Galena avenue bridge when the sheriff and Officer John Winters took them in charge.

The pair are said to have left Maquoketa early Tuesday and are thought to have been taken to Rock Island in an automobile. Deputy Sheriff found that they had registered at a Rock Island hotel Tuesday night assuming the names of White and Plock. They apparently left the Rock Island hotel and went to Sterling last night, where they came to stay until this morning, then came to Dixon. They had been in the city but a very short time before they were taken in custody. The Iowa officers left at 1 o'clock this afternoon taking them home.

HISTORY OF LIFE PREACHER'S WIFE IS BEING SOUGHT

Solution of Furnace Death No Nearer Than Tuesday.

BULLETIN
By Associated Press Leased Wire
Canton, O., Nov. 20.—Still maintaining that his wife committed suicide by cremating herself in the furnace of their Bexley home, Rev. C. V. Sheatsley, here to attend the funeral of Mrs. Sheatsley at Paris, said that the only new angle in the case that he knew of was the finding of a piece of glass in the furnace.

"This may throw some light on the tragedy," he said.

Clarence Sheatsley, the younger son who found the body of his mother in the furnace, but failed to tell other members of the family, told officials that a bottle of acid was missing from the medicine case in the bath room. The disappearance of the acid has strengthened the suicide theory. The piece of glass, it is believed, may be the acid bottle melted down by the heat.

Mrs. Lydia Sponseller, aged mother of Mrs. Sheatsley, declared in an interview here today that she believed her daughter had taken her own life and that she had not been murdered by any member of the Sheatsley family.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Columbus, O., Nov. 20.—In an effort to piece together loose threads in the domestic life of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, wife of Rev. C. V. Sheatsley, pastor of a leading church of the Bexley suburb, whose cremated body was found in the furnace of the Sheatsley home Monday, so it might be ascertained whether the mystery of her death finally to be established as suicide or murder, County Prosecutor King carried his investigation today into the circle of the dead woman's blood relatives.

Accompanied by City Detective Harry Carson, Mr. King left for Paris home of Mrs. Sheatsley's mother today, to go over with the aged mother the history of the daughter from infancy down through the intervening years to her marriage with Rev. Sheatsley and the domestic relations in the Sheatsley home up to the time of the daughter's death. The mother made her home with her daughter for several years until recently.

Hope to Prove Theory
By getting the history of Mrs. Sheatsley, Prosecutor King hopes to be able to strengthen or disprove the theory advanced by many and clung to by County Coroner Murphy, that Mrs. Sheatsley climbed into the furnace and deliberately destroyed herself. Mr. King maintains that Mrs. Sheatsley was the victim of foul play.

While at Paris, Mr. King also expects to question brothers of the dead woman to ascertain what light they may throw on her life.

Following the funeral services yesterday afternoon, the remains were taken to Paris, O., where burial was to be made this afternoon.

Rev. Sheatsley and the two daughters, accompanied by a few close friends, made the trip by train. The two sons, Milton and Clarence made the trip by automobile with their uncle, Charles, and Harry Sponseller.

City Detective Cox, who has been working on the mystery, stated today that he is firmly convinced that Mrs. Sheatsley committed suicide.

H. Cleveland, insurance agent and W. F. Bradley, factory superintendent, both of high social and business standing in the community. # Today's Market Report

Wheat and Corn Both Lost Ground on Trade

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Nov. 20.—Material set back in prices for wheat and for other grains as well, took place today as soon as trading began. Downturns in wheat at Liverpool acted as the chief depressing factor. On the decline of wheat values however, good buying developed owing in some degree to announcement that exports of domestic wheat are turning out to be much larger than was generally believed. Opening prices which ranged from 1 1/4 to 2 1/4 lower, with Dec. 49 1/2 @ 50 1/4 and May 1 5/8 @ 1 5/16, were followed by a decided further drop and then something of a reaction.

Subsequently a bearish Canadian report estimate from railroad sources attracted considerable notice and so did Argentine rains and favorable reports from Australia. The close was heavy, 3/4 to 1/2 net lower, Dec. 49 1/2 @ 50 1/4 and May 1 5/8 @ 1 5/16. General selling, part of which was a forced character to stop losses, a pulled down corn. After opening 3/4 net more and then showed power to rally.

Cuts started at 1/4 to 1 1/4 lower, lay 55 1/2 @ 56 and continued downgraded. Provisions were easier.

Later there were indications that the country was offering cash corn more freely. The close was weak, 3/4 to 1/2 net lower, May 1 1/4 @ 1 1/8.

LOS ANGELES IS AGAIN RECEIVING WATER SUPPLY

Raiders Turn Water Into Aqueduct; Settlement Soon.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Los Angeles, Calif., Nov. 20.—The waters of the Los Angeles aqueduct, diverted into Owens Lake last Sunday by a raiding party of Owen Valley ranchers who seized and opened the Alabama waste gates north of Lone Pine, Inyo county, were turned back into their course by a raiding party at 2:40 a. m., today, says a dispatch to the Los Angeles Times.

The ranchers' decision to abandon their abandoned determination "to hold the gates open until state troops are sent or Los Angeles comes to our terms" was reached at a conference of leaders held at Keeler, on the shores of Owens Lake, during the night. It was reached, says the Times Dispatch as a result of the resolution adopted last Tuesday by the Los Angeles Clearing House Association promising its cooperation in promoting a settlement of the water rights feud "providing the gates are closed."

This resolution, accompanied by a telegram from W. W. Waterson, Owens Valley banker, who Tuesday laid the case of the ranchers before the Clearing House Association, was forwarded to Carl Keough, president of the Owens River Canal Company, and Harry Glascock, publisher of the Owens Valley Herald.

Seek to Show Robber Planned Death of Pals
By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Nov. 20.—A startling move was made by the defense today in the trial of William Paly, former post-office inspector and two others, charged with conspiracy in connection with the $200,000 mail train robbery, at Rondout, Illinois, June 12 last, in offering to prove that Brent Glascock, leader of the actual robbery, deliberately shot Willie Newton, one of the bandits, and planned to kill Herbert Holliday, another.

Defense attorneys, after Federal Judge Cliffe had excused the jury from the court room, moved to be permitted to produce evidence to Glascock planned to do away with both Willie Newton and Holliday to provide larger distributive shares of the loot to himself and the others.

Judge Cliffe denied the defense request.

CHIEF CHICAGO DETECTIVES TO QUIT HIS POST

Tenders Resignation After Demotion By Police Chief.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Nov. 20.—A reorganization of the Chicago Detective Bureau will be the first step of William Schomaker, named chief of detectives yesterday to succeed Michael Hughes, demoted in a shakeup of the police department as a result of investigation of the slaying ten days ago of Dion O'Banion, florist and gang leader.

Hughes resigned after he was ordered transferred to an outlying police station, but he was reported today to be reconsidering at the instance of friends who urged him not to terminate his 20 years of service.

His friends thought he might withdraw his resignation and take a six months' furlough.

Meanwhile the coroner's jury investigating O'Banion's death has asked that it be allowed to take the inquiry from police hands and conduct it through special investigation by 20 picked detectives. The jury announced it would call before it Morgan A. Collins, chief of police, and the new detective chief.

At the same time State's Attorneys who held Frank Uale and Sam Polacka of New York for questioning in connection with O'Banion's death were notified writs of habeas corpus would be issued for their release unless formal charges were made.

Manchu Soy Beans Made Good Record in Edgar Co.
Paris, Ill.—Manchu, a variety of soybean which has been meeting with increased favor among Illinois farmers, on a number of Edgar county farms made exceptionally good yields, according to reports to the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. The average yield of beans from 480 acres grown by eight farmers was little better than 20 bushels an acre.

The highest yield reported was obtained by William Colwell, near Kansas, who had 30 acres which averaged a shade more than 23 1/2 bushels.

These yields are in line with those obtained on the experiment station farm of the agricultural college where Manchu variety has been tested for a number of years, according to Farm Adviser Enos Waters. During that time, Manchu has yielded almost three bushels of beans more an acre than the next highest yield.

Wilson Dam was viewed from a series of tracks built along the structure. Details of construction were explained by engineers.

At a banquet, tendered the visitors last night by trade bodies of Tusculum, Sheffield and Florence, Senator McKinley voiced the sentiment that Muscle Shoals was only in the first stages of development and believed title to the property should be retained by the government.

"POWER HOGS" BACK OF FIGHT AGAINST WATER-DIVERSION

Appeals to All Sections Country to Aid Lakes to Gulf Waterway.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Evansville, Ind., Nov. 20.—Power, and more power, is the sinister motive behind the effort to divert Chicago and the Illinois River of 10,000 cubic feet of water a second from Lake Michigan, Congressman William E. Hull, Peoria, Illinois, told the sixth annual convention of the Mississippi Valley Association here today.

"We must fight hard, for we have confronting us the influence and money of Canadian and Niagara power companies working under the cloak of lake carriers who are making a claim that this water will lower the lake level," said Congressman Hull.

"The diversion has been going on for 25 years and no bad results have occurred."

"The water hogs of Canada and Niagara Falls would steal from us this 10,000 cubic feet of water and contest with each other to see who would take it and make $10,000,000 per year out of it by selling electric power."

Warns Eastern Interests
Congressman Hull then appealed to everyone in the midwest, north, west and south to fight for the retention of this divergence of water into the Chicago and Illinois rivers.

He also appealed to the east by saying: "the east should be more charitable and not try to monopolize all the natural resources of our nation or some day the mid-west, the west and the south will combine and destroy the great advantage they seem to hold."

Congressman Hull told the history of the deep water way project of a navigable stage from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. He said the effort started as early as 1822 and various laws were passed making it possible.

The history led down to the sessions of the internal water ways commission and Congressman Hull stated it was the intent of this commission to charge this 10,000 cubic feet per second, diverted at Chicago, against the government, because the commission allowed the diversion of 20,000 cubic feet per second from the Niagara river above the falls for power purposes and at the same time allow 36,000 cubic feet per second diversion to the Canadian government.

The report of this commission states further, Congressman Hull said, that "the prohibition of this article shall not apply to the diversion of water for sanitary or domestic purposes."

"But in my judgment," Mr. Hull continued, "of all the clauses in the treaty that would make it apparent and prove the fact that that was the main thought in the treaty, as the following: 'foregoing provision shall not apply to or disturb any existing uses of boundary waters on either side of the boundary.'"

Shows Good of Waterway
Congressman Hull told of the advantages of the Gulf to the Lakes water ways by showing that a piano shipped by water from New York to San Francisco via the Panama Canal costs $12.50 while the same piano shipped by freight by railroad costs $51.50.

"The great west is not yet awake to the fact that their only hope for a reduction in freight rates lies in the improvement of this inland waterway which is far more necessary to the people of the United States than the Panama Canal," he said, "we did not hesitate to vote millions for that enterprise which gave relief only to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts."

Support of the Porter bill providing for a 30 year bond issue for river and harbor improvement, passage by congress of the rivers and harbors bill with the full amount of the estimates appropriated, and changes in the federal budget system were urged by President James E. Smith in his address, prepared for delivery at the opening session.

Told of Achievements
He recited achievements of the association during the past year, including among them, the passage of legislation and obtaining of appropriations for flood control and improvements in the Mississippi, Tennessee, and Missouri rivers.

The association, he said, supported the legislation in congress to divert the necessary amount of water from Lake Michigan for sanitary purposes and to provide for the successful navigation of the Illinois waterway.

He charged discrimination by the director of the federal budget against the Mississippi valley in cutting down estimates of army engineers for river and harbor improvement in 1923 and 1922. Less than $15,000,000 has been annually expended during the past five years upon Mississippi valley waterways, he declared, while last year $150,000,000 was expended by the national and state government for public highway building.

The waterways plank of the republican platform, approving of development of great lakes to gulf and Atlantic routes and improvements in

HARD CONTEST FOR SPEAKER IS ALMOST CERTAIN

Madden, Burton and Longworth Likely to Seek Chair.

BY HARRY B. HUNT
NEA Service Writer

Washington—Chicago's right to the title of "The Windy City" may have a new explanation when the new Congress is organized. If Martin B. Madden, the white haired legislator from the Illinois metropolis, wins his fight for the speakership of the House, which is to be vacated by the promotion of Frederick Gillett to the Senate.

With Charley Daves presiding over the deliberations of the Senate and Madden wielding the gavel on the House side, Chicago certainly would be sitting astride Congress.

There will have to be a deal of maneuvering, however, before this is accomplished. Madden is assured of two rivals for the seat at the head of the House.

Nick Longworth of Cincinnati, as bald as Madden is gray, would like to succeed Gillett. Like Madden, Nick has served 20 years in the House and would like to be promoted.

As floor leader of the Republican near majority in the present Congress Nick has proved himself a clever tactician in legislative maneuvering. And that is one of the essential qualifications for a speaker.

As an initiator of new legislation and as an advocate of measures on the floor of the House, Madden has been much more active and influential than Longworth.

Nick isn't a norator and knows it. His most effective speeches are made in cloak rooms and in quiet conferences.

No sooner had the Madden-Longworth forces begun to line up, however, than that veteran legislator from Cuyahoga county, Ohio, Theodore E. Burton, intimated that he was being besought by many members to shy his hat into the speakership ring and make it a three-sided fight.

In addition to having served in the House as long as either Madden or Longworth, Burton has behind him a record of six years in the Senate.

There is a suggestion on the 73-year-old bachelor from Cleveland has the sanction of President Coolidge in his announced aspiration to the speakership, though of course the executive will use no direct pressure in trying to get at the helm in the House as long as either Madden or Longworth.

That Burton was the Coolidge Cleveland convention last June, however, is regarded as indicating the way the presidential favor lies.

Behind the scenes in this speakership fight, however, a woman may play the deciding role.

The political ability and influence of Mrs. Longworth—formerly Alice Roosevelt—if brought to bear in behalf of her husband may prove the deciding factor.

"Princess Alice," as she is still known to her intimates, is credited with having one of the cleverest political minds the capital ever knew, and with knowing just how to "put across" the campaign in which she is interested.

If she aspires to be "Mrs. Speaker," and to see Nick's bald dome shining above the dais of the speaker's platform, her friends are willing to wager that she will be it and Nick will be there.

These same folks, however, question whether Mrs. Longworth is especially anxious for hubby to win the speakership.

The wife of the speaker is always expected to follow a certain rather cut-and-dried social schedule. And "Princess Alice," who has always been something of a social "rebel," might not care to conform to what precedent has established as the proper thing for the speaker's wife to do.

This social independence, which may be passed unnoticed in the wife of a mere member of the House, might, however, create a real ruckus in Washington drawing rooms if held by the wife of the speaker.

YOU HAVE TO CROSS THE VALLEYS—

By Douglas Malloch.

You will have to cross the valleys if you want to climb the hills.

The unexciting journey through the unexciting ways.

It is not the trail that wears, it is not the climb that kills—

It's the ordinary labor of the ordinary days.

It's the waiting, and the working, and the ordinary task.

It's the long and dusty highway, it's the valley that you tread.

That will show the world it isn't just the glorious you ask.

That will show you have the courage for the greater task ahead.

YOU WILL COME TO VALES OF SORROW, TO THE HOT AND THIRSTY PLAIN.

You will come to disappointment, and to weariness, and ill.

But, your eyes upon the summit, pick your burden up again—

For you have to cross the valleys if you want to climb the hills!

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS—

Paint Shades.

The life of a window shade may be prolonged by painting it with a flat oil paint.

Use Art Gum.

When window shades have become very soiled, it is more satisfactory to clean them with art gum than to try to use soap and water.

Amenic Legion

Auxiliary Meeting

The American Legion Auxiliary

Dixon Post No. 12, met in regular session Wednesday evening in G. A. R. hall with a very good attendance. The usual order of business was observed.

The order voted $15 to be sent to the Orphan's home at Normal, Ill. There are 125 children of World War veterans being cared for at this home.

They also voted to send fresh eggs each month to Oak Forest T. B. Sanitarium for our boys who are being taken care of there.

An invitation from the veterans of Foreign Wars to attend their service at Nachusa Orphanage Sunday afternoon was received and accepted. The beautiful flag at the orphanage was presented by the American Legion Auxiliary three years ago. The next meeting will be Dec. 3, in the afternoon. Election of officers will be held at that time.

Sunday School Class

Was Entertained

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hicks delightfully entertained twenty members of Charles Boy's Sunday school class of the Brethren church at their home Friday evening. Games were played and music enjoyed and tempting refreshments were served, completing a happy evening.

WERE GUESTS AT ARTHUR CLAYTON HOME—

Mr. and Mrs. William Fisher of North Dixon and Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Fisher and children of the Bend were entertained Sunday at the Arthur Clayton home.

JEWELS POPULAR—

The rage for jewels is now at its height and necklaces, chains and ornaments of artificial stones are seen everywhere. It is interesting to note that jeweled ornaments are again being worn in the hair.

Menus for a Family

Macaroni a la Italian.

One cup macaroni, 1/2 cup finely chopped cheese, 8 mushrooms, 2 cups canned tomatoes, 4 tablespoons minced cold boiled or broiled ham.

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender, about 20 minutes.

Drain. Rub tomatoes through a strainer to remove seeds. Add mushrooms and ham to tomato puree, and heat to the boiling point, stirring to prevent sticking. Add macaroni and turn into a buttered baking dish. Bake 15 minutes in a hot oven.

Eggless Cake.

Two cups flour, 1 1/2 cups sugar, 4 tablespoons lard, 4 tablespoons butter, 1 cup sour milk, 1 teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 cup seeded and chopped raisins.

Put shortening into flour. Stir in sugar. Dissolve soda in sour milk and stir into first mixture. Beat well and add cinnamon, salt and raisins. Mix thoroughly and turn into a buttered and floured loaf-cake pan and bake 45 or 50 minutes in a moderate oven.

Parsnip Fritters.

Three large parsnips, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon sugar, 3 tablespoons butter, 1 egg fine cracker crumbs.

Cook parsnips in slightly salted boiling water until tender. Plunge into cold water and slip skins. Mash and season with salt, pepper, sugar and butter. Make into small flat cakes. Roll in cracker crumbs, dip in egg slightly beaten with one tablespoon cold water and roll again in crumbs. Fry in a frying pan in butter and bacon fat until a delicate brown. Brown first on one side and then on the other. (Copyright, 1924, NEA Service, Inc.)

Dixon Woman's Club Meeting

A meeting of the Dixon Woman's club was held Saturday afternoon at the Christian church and there was a good attendance of members and friends to hear the excellent program in charge of the Music department of the club. The meeting was open to the public for the nominal guest day fee.

A recital was given by Miss Nena Bolmar of Chicago, a young woman possessing a beautifully sweet and clear soprano voice whose numbers gave entire satisfaction and to whom it was a privilege and a delight to listen. She was accompanied in a most artistic and musicianly manner by Miss Clara Powell of Chicago.

Outstanding numbers for the afternoon were "One Fine Day"; A Lullaby by Mozart; and two delightful Russian numbers. The enthusiastic applause accorded the artists gave ample evidence that they were appreciated.

The hostesses for the afternoon were Mesdames Burd, Baird, Moore, Marks, Trowbridge, Wilson, Palmer.

Former Dixon People

Attended Masquerade

A number of former Dixon people now living in Milwaukee attended a masquerade in Milwaukee at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Bibb.

A happy evening was spent in dancing and music was also a form of entertainment. Refreshments were enjoyed.

A grand promenade was held, Mrs. Rose Vandemont and Ellis Herbon winning the prize for the most comical costumes.

Those attending included Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Vandemont, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Carlson, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Herbon, Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Hamill, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sullivan, Mrs. Mamie Wendell, Miss Dimples Cole, Miss Nina Hamill, John Hamill and Willard Bibb, Miss Mary Klompke, Miss Anna Newman and Arthur Radway.

MUFF PURSES—

Novel muff purses are made of black suede banded in fur with a monogrammed flap that conceals the many compartments for vanity case, cigarettes, kerchief and incidentally money.

THE DEATHBED WEDDING.

Racing with death in an auto, a Boston girl arrived in Albany, N. Y., in time to marry her sweetheart four hours before he died from injuries received when he fell under a railroad train.

These deathbed marriages are not uncommon. In one case, an English woman sailed for India and married her lover, whom she had not seen for three years, barely before he death-rattle sounded in his throat.

It is inspiring to know that, in our blasé generation, there still are multitudes who believe love is eternal, and not merely an episode this side of the grave.

Are lovers re-united in the Great Beyond?
A belief to this effect is the supreme comfort for countless millions who have found "the right person."

In true love, men and women are closest to the spiritual.

Time does not lessen affection. Tears dim the eyes of the aged as they summon in memory the mate or sweetheart who passed on long ago.

The unhappily married must fervently hope that death will be an absolute divorce from their unfortunate choice.

Many would vote for extinction in preference to eternal life if they thought they would be condemned forever to their earthly mates.

Behind everything is a wise and definite reason.

The reason for unhappy marriages has baffled philosophers in all centuries. Socrates believed that when a soul enters the world it is separated into two beings, a male and a female. These wander the earth, seeking reunion. If a man or woman weds the "wrong half," misery follows.

Many mystics believe that an unhappy marriage is an affliction visited on the unfortunate—a burden through his life, a problem. Apparently agreeing with the mystics are people who "make the best of a bad bargain." Surely, for them, death should be an eternal release.

PRICE.

This will interest you if you own oil stocks
(as nearly every one does).

Uncle Sam reports that the world produced 42,642 million gallons of crude oil last year and used only 38,315 gallons. This left an enormous surplus, which by the law of supply and demand made the price of crude oil, at the wells, low. This law of supply and demand still is the real ruler of economics, though it is often sidetracked temporarily by the conspiracies of manipulators.

APE-MAN.

An ape-man saw a forest fire started by lightning. He picked up a piece of wood, blazing at one end, and ran into the darkness with it. That was man's first form of artificial illumination.

Recently Gene Sarazen played golf at night, the course illumined by an electric searchlight of 400 million candlepower.
Later this powerful light will seem, to future men, as primitive as the ape-man's blazing fagot seems to us today. We are barbarians, by future standards.

RABBIT-FOOT.

An old medical book, printed in 1668,
comes to light. It urges carrying a rabbit's foot to ward off rheumatism. That was 256 years ago. Superstition dies hard—if ever.

Another remedy in the old book:
"With an iron nail raise and cut the gum away from about the teeth till it bleed, and that some of the blood stick upon the nail; then drive it into a wooden beam up to the head; after this is done you shall never have toothache in all your life."

Many who tried it probably got lockjaw or blood-poisoning.

THE BUSINESS VOCABULARY.

Five hundred words, according to researches conducted by the Russell Sage Foundation, make up the working vocabulary of the average American business man. That is not the conversational vocabulary, but the correspondence vocabulary.

It is easy for the stenographer, but rather monotonous for the recipients of business letters. And in view of the intelligence and range of knowledge of the aforesaid business man, it is a remarkable limitation. The average grammar school graduate knows many more than 500 words. A cultured person may have the ready use of several thousand and may recognize several times as many as he uses himself.

No other language has, or ever has had,
the richness and variety of the English language. Why be satisfied merely with a small fraction of its wealth, the petty coins of business and social intercourse, used so much that they are worn as smooth as old dimes and pennies?

A rich vocabulary shows a rich mind. Variety is the spice of speech and correspondence, no less than of life itself.

The business man who has many words at his disposal can make his point with force and certainty. He can win attention and respect and make his letters readable and read.
The 500-word letter writer often fails of his purpose because every word and phrase is so familiar as to arouse no interest. Even an occasional word so unusual as to perplex the reader may be a good thing, because it makes him stop and pay attention to what he is reading instead of sliding through it with his mind shut.

Big city newspapers, who can afford the possible $1000 fine and take chances of a jail sentence, are printing income tax returns to satisfy the curious. One man known to have an income of at least half a million dollars is listed as paying $30 income tax. The secret of it is that most of his income comes from tax-free securities. We ought to have a law that all securities hereafter issued shall be taxable.

What this country needs more than anything is an alarm clock that wakes only the man who sets it.

This is a fine country; but in Belgium, a married couple was fined for kissing too much in public.

There are two kinds of business men: those who wait for prosperity, and those who go after it.

A wise man knows he is acting foolish to fall in love this close to Christmas.

We can all be thankful this Thanksgiving that saxophones are hard to learn to play.

"We want some more riddles, please," said the Twins

"We want some more riddles," said the Twins.

"Good!" said the Riddle Lady. "I'm just trying to think up a good one."

Nancy and Nick got as close as ever they could, but the Fat Man of Bombay puffed so loudly when he breathed, poor thing, that it didn't do much good. They were sure they weren't going to hear a word.

Nancy was greatly relieved when all at once the fat man said, "Oh shucks! I never guessed a riddle in my life and I'm not going to begin now. If you don't mind, Mrs. John, I think I'll just go and sit on your nice little front porch and smoke my pipe."

"Oh, yes do, Mister Fat Man," said Mrs. John (for that was the only name he had), so away he waddled.
Everyone could hear twice as well
after he left.

"Here's a new riddle," said the Riddle Lady. So she began:
"He sits on a throne,
And he rides a white horse,
And he wears twenty rings on his hand,

Rows of soldiers stand stiffly,
Not moving of course,
Just waiting to do his command.

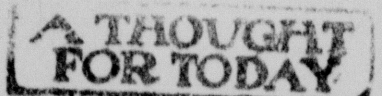

"A dozen long feathers
Adorn his fine hat,
And a buckle both handsome and big,
And his hair's curled so finely,
I'm positive that Any person would think 'twas a wig.

"His robe is of velvet,
And trimmed up with ermine,
As white as the midwinter snows,
And as silkworms make silk,
Tisn't hard to determine,
Ten thousand worked hard on his hose.

"His crown is of gold,
Set with rubies bright red,
And with diamonds and sapphires and pearls,
Oh, it surely must be
Quite a load on his head,
And mugs up all his perwig curls.

"His dishes are made
Of the richest of wares,
And his furniture's certainly grand,
Why they say that the backs
Of his dining room chairs, Contain gems quite as big as your hand.

On top of a hill,

Night Coughing—
How to Stop It

Night coughing which, through loss of valuable sleep, often makes you feel utterly worn-out and useless during the day, and by quickly weakening the system lays you open to the most dangerous infections, can now be promptly checked by a very simple treatment. People who have hardly been able to rest on account of coughing spells have found that they can sleep the whole night through undisturbed often after the very first trial.

The treatment is based on a remarkable prescription known as Dr. King's New Discovery. You simply take a teaspoonful at night before retiring and hold it in your throat for 15 or 20 seconds before swallowing it. The prescription has a double action. It not only soothes and heals the soreness and irritation, but it quickly loosens and removes the phlegm and congestion which is the real cause of the cough. The result is that you usually sleep as soundly as a babe the very first night, and the cough goes in a very short time.

The prescription contains no opiates or harmful drugs. Excellent for children as well as grown-ups. For coughs, chest colds, hoarseness, sore throat, whooping croup, bronchitis, laryngitis and bronchial asthma. At all good druggists. Ask for

INAUGURAL BALL SEEMS DOOMED; CAL IS OPPOSED

Re-establishment of Gay Fete Improbable at Coming Inaugural.

BY HARRY B. HUNT
NEA Service Writer

Washington—The hottest speech of his political career was one delivered by Senator Jim Watson of Indiana in the closing days of the recent campaign.

In fact, the heat and fireworks of the occasion were so realistic that for the time being even Senator Jim forgot all thought of keeping cool with his presidential candidate.

As an orator, Watson supplements his vocal cords with his arms and hands. He thrashes the air and pounds with his fist in his desire to drive home and clinch the arguments he is making.

In the midst of these emphatic gestures, on this particular occasion, Jim brought his hands down with a mighty clap on his hips.

A realistic puff of smoke resulted. Then some gymnastics on the part of the speaker clearly not intended as oratorical gestures.

The resounding thump Jim had given himself had set off a box of matches in a senatorial pocket and gave the audience some campaign pyrotechnics not equaled by any other speech of the year.

Despite Captain W. H. Stayton's claim of a substantial gain in "wet" or moderately "moist" members of the new Congress, and notwithstanding Representative John Philip Hill's acquittal by a Baltimore jury, which held he had a right to serve home-made elder and wine of more than Volstead alcoholic strength, one definite loss for the anti-prohibitionists will have to be chalked up.

A member of Congress heretofore active in opposing the prohibition law has climbed on the water wagon. And he vows—perhaps, however, not for the first time—that he's on to stay.

On a train coming back to Washington after the election this legislator fell in with a happy crowd in possession of a couple cartons of "prohibition stuff."

At least it tasted like old times to the parched palate of this politician, and one drink called for another until by the time the supply gave out, one legal limit had become completely extinguished.

When the train pulled into Union Station next morning this member was still deep in dreams. He was busy chasing lions in the Botanical Gardens with a flipjack when the porter tried to rouse him, and he refused to come back to earth.

Before repeated proddings and exhortations by the knight of the whisk broom had whisked the whisky from his brain, the train crew had shunted the sleeper a mile up the track into the yards.

"I walked for about an hour," he said afterward in describing his later adventures, "across not less than a million railroad tracks, and always alongside what I became convinced must be the longest brick building in the world. Finally, after I had a good sweat worked up, I began charting my landmarks. Then I discovered that I had been circumnavigating the Pennsylvania roundhouse."

"After I finally got to a street car and to my hotel, I thought things out a bit. And I concluded that when a little liquor gets me so befuddled I can't tell a round house from a straight street, it's time to quit. So, hereafter, it's the straight street for me. And a dry one."

President Coolidge's aversion to social affairs seems to have marked the doom of the inaugural ball proposed for next March 4.

"Would I be expected to attend?" the president is said to have inquired when the suggestion of the ball was made to him.

When informed that that was the real reason and excuse for such balls, he indicated definitely that he wasn't strong for the idea.

Wilson first banned the Inaugural ball on the score that it wasn't democratic. Harding banned it on the score of economy. Rejection by Coolidge probably marks the end of such functions forever.

PRINCESSES FROM FOUR CORNERS

Princesses from the north, east, south and west will attend the Queen's Ball at this year's Texas Cotton Palace Exposition in Waco. This bevy of girls will be there. Everyone is a princess, crowned by the governor of her state to represent it at the festival. In the top row from left to right are seen: Alice Hadley, St. Louis; Jennie Lee Covington, Paducah, Ky.; Louise Marshall, Ruleville, Miss.; Finley Elder, Clarksville, Tenn.; Gladys Brown, Asheville, Tenn.; and Viola Thomas, New York City. In the bottom row, from left to right, are: May Gorton, Hartford, Conn.; Edith Shinn, Des Moines; Evelyn Fay Brice, Roswell, N. M.; Virginia Estes, Nashville, Ark.; Carmea Rothenberger, Napoleon, O.; Thelma Jones, Danville, Va.; and Georgena Bowman, Topeka, Kas.

New York—Two girls in front of the Waldorf buy horse charts, eagerly turn the pages and read down the columns of winners and also-rans.

Two sportive chorus girls, methinks. Not a bit of it! Their grandmother is just a pace behind them. "Did you win, dearie?" she asks. "No, the nag ran third," one of the girls answers.

Handbooks do an enormous business in New York. A fellow who knows quite a bit about that sort of thing told me the other day that an average of $500,000 a day is bet in New York on horse races, winter and summer, by people who seldom, if ever, see a race run.

Bookmakers have agents in almost every big office building. Some of these agents accept as little as 25 cents a bet. That is true especially in buildings where girls wager on the horses.

Most of the bookmakers are affiliated with the Big Book in Hoboken. Hoboken is the center of all race track gambling in the United States. New York layers of odds who are acquainted over the telephone. If they receive more wagers on a horse than they care to chance in cashing they call Hoboken and "lay off" part of the money.

The Big Book in Hoboken will take a bet in any amount. The operators know that in the long run they have everything to gain and nothing to lose. Every horse in every race is a medium of play. And only one horse can win.

Eugene is a cynical headwaiter. "People who come in here don't know what books they are," he told me the other evening. "In all likelihood the booze we sell is watered before we get it. We add enough water to get twice the volume. Then the booze come in here and pour the stuff into gingerale and ice, further weakening it. But they think they're getting a great kick out of it."

With Jack Dempsey as the feature, Loew's State Theater took in $41,000 in one week. That was $12,000 more than the house record, set by Eva Tanguay.

A want ad in a Sunday morning paper for an office assistant brought almost 200 answers. Seventy-five per cent of the applicants were married women. Most of the married applicants were under 25 and were willing to work for $18 a week, or less.

Those aren't just dry statistics. They reflect the domestic situation in New York—hundreds of young couples living in furnished rooms, unable to get along unless husband and wife both work.

That condition, in turn, offers food for thought for those interested in the race suicide question.

Mrs. Gertrude Koropsky was happy when she secured one day's work as scrubwoman in a Bronx apartment house. One of the tenants insisted on giving her a drink of whiskey. A few hours later Mrs. Koropsky was stricken blind.

Maple Sugar Brings Profits to Canadians

Ottawa, Ont.—Maple trees in Canada produced sugar to the value of $3,691,141 in 1924, according to a report issued by the Dominion department of agriculture. This was the highest return in ten years. Sixty thousand farmers in the four eastern provinces were engaged in the maple sugar industry this year, according to the report, and only one-half of the available sugar maples in this area were made productive. AL GAMES OF CONFERENCE SET FOR WEEK-END Championship Hopes, Individual Records at Stake in Games.

Associated Press Leased Wire Chicago, Nov. 20.—More championship hopes, individual records and trophies are involved in this Western Conference finale at any other time during the season.

A victory over Wisconsin for Coach Stagg is grooming a full aggregation of subs to augment his varsity, means undisputed possession of the crown for the Matre Dame hopes to advance another notch in the climb to a claim national championship by a victory over Northwestern. The game is a swan song of Captain Wieniecke and Purple and his mates are desiring of tendering him a farewell by Coach Rickne's fearsome "Horseman", Layden, Stuhldre-Crowley and Miller.

Michigan vs. Iowa. Chicago and Iowa have a chance to tie involved in their meeting in an Arbor. A victory for either, led to a Chicago loss to Wisconsin would mean championship capture. The Wolverines have committed their defense and work has been on the attack in which forced passed so far have been stressing Iowa's fear of an aerial attack. Fighting Hawkeyes preparations to combat a passing game. At well, Michigan's quarter, unity to end his conference career as the leading "Red" Grange who point, is out for the injured shoulder. Harry Thomas, Chicago never having participated in a conference game in 1924. Thomas was out of the game because Chicago lost in the years he has played with the team.

Green Turtle is Trophy. A green turtle with a shell two feet diameter is the trophy in the Illinois-Ohio State game. Junior honor titles of both schools have arranged prize in emulation of the Michigan Minnesota "little brown jug." The turtle goes with Ohio State as it goes today for Urbana.

Premier Honors in the Hoosier State. A of the Western Conference Indiana-Purdue to stent preparation for their tilt at Lafayette. Indiana's victory over Ohio State gives it the edge, but the boiler-makers have a victory over Northwestern and a good showing against Michigan to go to their credit. TWO ILLINI STARS IN THEIR LAST GAME AGAINST OHIO

WALLIE McILWAIN, Halfback.

GIL ROBERTS, Center.

Here, are two Illini stars who have helped to make gridiron history. Wallie McIlwain, halfback, has played for three years and has had a lot to do with the Illini success. Wallie is a sophomore scored Illinois' touchdown on Iowa in that famous 7-8 defeat for the Illini. As an interferer and defensive player McIlwain and he is a dandy line plunger. This year the Highland Park boy started off with injuries and then suffered a broken hand. It is thought he will be able to play part of Saturdays game against the Buckeyes. Gil Roberts, Oskaloosa, Ia., won the regular job at center this year after he had served as a reserve for two years. Gil is not only a cracking good center but is a shark in his studies, being a member of the coveted Phi Beta Kappa badge. He will naturally be keyed up to do his best in his final game. The Bucks, the Illini believe, will cause them plenty of trouble.

CRYSTALLIZING OF METAL PLAIN DIRT IN MATTER. Metalurgist Discusses Tests Made to Avoid Breakage. Crystallization and breakage, formerly given as the cause for the failure of a part of a motor car after a long period of service, has become one of the exploded theories of the past. Studies which have destroyed the old "crystallization" theory have also pointed the way to even greater dependability in highly stressed parts of the present day car, according to L. A. Danse, metallurgist of the Cadillac Motor Car Company. Mr. Danse explains that in advanced engineering circles the mysterious something commonly called crystallization and breakage has been analyzed just as medical men analyze a disease and isolate its germ and that it is in reality "fatigue" breakage, due to impurity in the metal or some other definite defect which can now be exposed by known laboratory and physical tests.

"As metals are naturally crystalline in structure," states Mr. Danse, "it is evident that breakage in service is not due to crystallization. The metal is a crystalline mass from the time it is first melted and poured. When it solidifies after melting and pouring, it assumes the crystalline character; the same as water solidifies to snow, frost or ice crystals.

"BRINGING UP FATHER IN IRELAND." It seems to be entirely unnecessary to enter into any long explanation or announcement regarding the coming of the famous cartoon musical comedy, taken from those well known and universally liked cartoons, "Bringing Up Father," by Prince of Cartoon Artists George McManus. So we will simply say that "Bringing Up Father in Ireland" will come to the Academy of Music, Sterling, Sunday night, Nov. 23.

It's all new every season, new girls, new music and new comedy. You'll all agree that George McManus must have an unusually fertile brain, when he is able to conceive a new cartoon stunt for the newspaper readers every Sunday, as well as an entire new play for theater goers every season.

Mr. Schafer and his sister expect to return to their old home in Germany as soon as they can close up their business here. Fred has been a resident of Viola township for the past twenty-nine years and prior to that time worked by the month in this country for fifteen years. He and his sister have lived together and he now owns the well improved farm known as Ford Ditch farm. Last winter one of his sisters was buried here and he now feels as if he wanted to spend the rest of his days with his relatives in the "Old Country." He has always been a progressive and up to date farmer and a good neighbor, one who will be missed in his community.

Charles Bradshaw was at the County farm Friday where he took Christ Ziebarth of West Brooklyn. Mr. Ziebarth has been in very poor health for a long time. COMPTON HIGH SCHOOL. The local winners of the International Lighting Contest were announced Thursday morning. The contest was not a part of the school work but was participated in by members of the Freshman and Sophomore classes. The contest was very close but the judges ranked Velda Burley first, Helen Archer second, Maxine Holden third for the girls, and Wyman Montavon first, Wayne Bettner, second, and Wayne Archer third for the boys.

Basketball. Wednesday the local basketball team met Lee Center high school on the local grounds in a hotly contested game. The score was tied at the end of each of the four periods of the game and an extra period was necessary to decide the winner. In the extra session Harker caged a field goal and the locals won 10-8. A feature of the game was the fact that Lee Center did not have a personal foul called on them and only three for the Compton team. Friday the Franklin Grove team met the Compton boys on the home court. This game was also very close until in the last quarter, Compton forged ahead five points giving the home team the game 13-8. Holden made one more point than the whole Franklin Grove team. Don Archer starred at guard. Kelly of Paw Paw referred both games.

The Magnifying Glass of Radio

The amplifying transformer is the microscope of radio.

The scientist looking through a microscope gazes upon a fascinating world to cell and germ life so tiny as to be invisible to the naked eye. The microscope magnifies them.

Likewise the amplifying transformer magnifies, or amplifies, faint sounds to clear, distinct volume so that a whole roomful of people can hear them on a loud speaker.

But it is very important that the amplifying transformer does not distort the sounds at the same time it increases their volume. A transformer that distorts is like a microscope that blurs the vision. The amplifying transformer must not only increase the volume, but must also give it exactly like the original sound—pure in tone and quality, loud and clear in volume.

The amplifying transformer is a very important factor in good reception. It is through good transformers that amplification without distortion can be secured. Without a good transformer, no set, whatever else it may have, or how elaborate the case containing it, can give satisfactory results.

No part which enters into the construction of a radio set requires as high a grade of skill, on the part of both electrical engineers and experts in sound production. One well known company, nationally known as pioneer transformer and radio engineers and manufacturers, was the first company to market an audio frequency amplifying transformer for amateur and experimental purposes, and when it decided to bring out a radio frequency transformer it spent many months of research work in its laboratory before bringing out the new product.

The success of both its audio and radio frequency transformers demonstrates that radio manufacturing must be carried on by specialists of long experience both in electrical engineering and in sound production.

The transformers manufactured by this company are embedded in moisture proof, non-conducting sealing compound, and are subjected to the most rigid tests for short circuited turns and other possible defects, and so consistently has the company followed its original policy of furnishing only perfect transformers that whenever one is found which has the slightest defect it is replaced without charge. The standard of quality maintained by such companies of home-made sets. By using good transformers and other standard parts, which are now-a-days called for by their brand names, any man, woman or child, with a little ingenuity can build a set at home adapted to his own particular needs and taste, and get as good results—and sometimes better—than with a set purchased ready-made.

Many writers advocate the use of audio frequency transformers having multi-stage amplifier. The best expert opinion, however, is not in sympathy with this idea and insists that the ratio of 4.25 to 1 is best for all stages.

Amplification is the key to radio.

A Romance of the Spanish Main CAPTAIN BLOOD By RAFAEL SABATINI

Copyrighted, 1922, by Rafael Sabatini.
"CAPTAIN BLOOD," a Vitaphone picture with J. Warren Kerrigan in the title role, is an adaptation of this thrilling novel.

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued

"It's myself he's hunting at Tortuga, say lord," said Blood. "But I'm thinking that while he's about it, I'd best be looking after Jamaica for King William." He laughed, with more mirth than he had used in the last two months. "Set a course for Port Royal, Jeremy, and make all speed. We'll level yet with M. de Rivarol, and wipe off some other score at the same time."

"But you are not equal to it, dammit!" cried his lordship. "Any one of the Frenchman's three ships is a match for both yours, my man." "In guns—say," said Blood, and he smiled. "But there's more than guns that matter in these affairs. If your lordship would like to see an action fought at sea as an action should be fought, this is your opportunity."

"Rivarol carried in his hold the treasure plundered from Cartagena, amounting to forty million livres. He has gone into Port Royal with it. Whether he defeats me or not, he doesn't come out of Port Royal with it again, and sooner or later that treasure shall find its way into King William's coffers, after, say, one-fifth share shall have been paid to my buccaneers. Is that agreed, Lord Willoughby?"

His lordship stood up, and shaking back the cloud of lace from his wrist, held out a delicate white hand.

"Captain Blood, I discover greatness in you," said he.

"Sure it's your lordship has the fine sight to perceive it," laughed the Captain.

CHAPTER XXVII THE LAST FIGHT OF THE ARABELLA

It was the afternoon of that same day, and the two buccaneer ships rocked gently with idly flapping sails under the lee of the long spit of land forming the great natural harbor of Port Royal, and less than a mile from the straits leading into it, which the fort commanded. It was two hours and more since they had brought up thereabouts, having crept thither unobserved by the city and by M. de Rivarol's ships, and all the time the air had been acquirer with the roar of guns from sea and land, announcing that battle was joined between the French and the defenders of Port Royal. That long, inactive waiting was straining the nerves of both Lord Willoughby and van der Kuylen. Blood faced them, smiling confidently. "It's this way, now: there's nothing at all to be gained by precipitancy, and a deal to be gained by delaying, as I shall show you. I hope. Sure, it'll be time enough to go forward when the fort has shot its bolt." "He broke off to listen. "Aye, I was right. The fire's slackening. Ho there, Jeremy!"

Led now by Blood himself, they launched themselves upon the French.

Came the padding of feet along the decks, the creaking of blocks and the hoisting of sail. The helm was put over hard, and in a moment they were moving, the Arabella following ever in obedience to the signals from the Arabella, whilst Oxie the gunner, whom he had summoned, was receiving Blood's final instructions before plunging down to his station on the main deck.

Within a quarter of an hour they had rounded the head and stood in to the harbor mouth, within saker shot of Rivarol's three ships, to which they now abruptly disclosed themselves.

Where the fort had stood they now beheld a smacking rubbish heap, and the victorious Frenchman, with the ill standard trailing from his mastheads was sweeping forward to snatch the rich prize whose defenses he had shattered.

Blood scanned the French ships, and chuckled. The Victoreuse and the Medusa appeared to have taken no more than a few scars; but the third ship, the Baleine, listing heavily to larboard so as to keep the great gash in her starboard well above water, was out of account.

The sight of that great red ship with her gilt beak-head and open ports swinging broadside on must have given check to M. de Rivarol's exultation. Yet before he could move to give an order, before he could well resolve what order to give, a volcano of fire and metal burst upon him from the buccaneers, and his decks were swept by the murderous scythes of the broadside. The Arabella held to her course, giving place to the Elizabeth, which, following closely, executed the same manoeuvre, and then whilst still the Frenchmen were confused, panic-stricken by an attack that took them so utterly by surprise, the Arabella had gone about, and was returning in her tracks, presenting now her larboard guns, and losing her second broadside in the wake of the first. Came yet another broadside from the Elizabeth and then the Arabella's trumpet sent a call across the water, which flagships perfectly understood.

"On, now, Jeremy!" cried Blood. "Stand by, there! Prepare to board! Hayton... the grapnel!" Briskly he explained himself to his two guests. "Boarding is our only chance here. We are too heavily outgunned."

Of this the fullest demonstration followed quickly. The Frenchmen having recovered their wits at last, both ships swung broadside on, and concentrating upon the Arabella as the nearer and heavier, and therefore more immediately dangerous of their two opponents, volleys upon her jointly at almost the same moment. The Arabella rocked and staggered under that terrific hammering. For a moment she seemed to hesitate, then she plunged forward with a gaping hole forward, that was only just above the waterline. Meanwhile, the Frenchmen going about, gave the like reception to the Elizabeth. The Arabella, indifferently served by the wind, pressed forward to come to grips. But before she could accomplish her object, the Victoreuse had loaded her starboard guns again, and pounded her advancing enemy with a second broadside at close quarters. Amid the thunder of cannon, the rending of timbers, and the screams of maimed men, the half-wrecked Arabella plunged and reeled into the cloud of smoke that concealed her prey, and then from Hayton went up the cry that she was going down by the head. The blue and gold flank of the Victoreuse loomed through the smoke. But even as Blood caught that enheartening glimpse he perceived, too, how sluggish now was their advance. They must sink before they reached her. But they had not yet completely failed. Hayton himself, and a score of sturdy rogues whom his whistle had summoned, were crouching for shelter amid the wreckage of the fore-castle with grapples ready. Within seven or eight yards of the Victoreuse, when their way seemed spent, and their forward deck already awash under the eyes of the fearing, cheering Frenchmen, those men leapt up and forward, and hurled their grapples across the chasm. Of the four they flung, two reached the Frenchman's decks, and fastened there. Unhesitatingly all threw themselves upon the chain of one of those grapples, neglecting the other, and heaved upon it with all their might to warp the ships together. Blood sent out his voice in a clarion call: "Musketeers to the prow!"

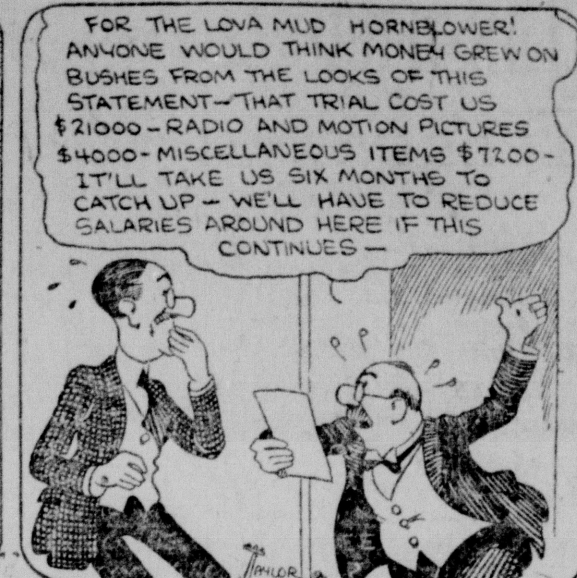

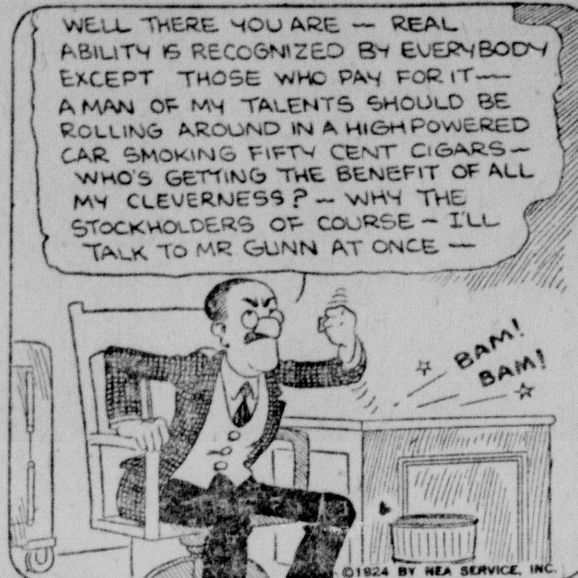

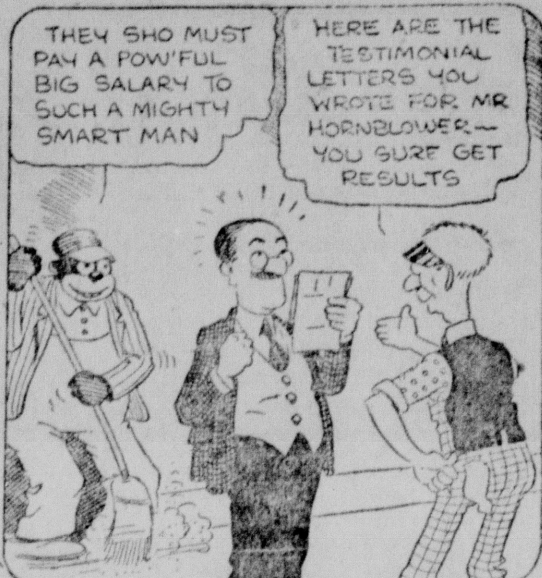

Fifty of them dashed forward instantly, and from the ruins of the fore-castle they blazed over the heads of Hayton's men, mowing down the French soldiers who unable to dislodge the frenzied, firmly held where they had deeply bitten into the timbers of the Victoreuse, were themselves preparing to fire upon the grapple crew.

Starboard to starboard the two ships swung against each other with a jarring thud. The advance guard of boarders, a hundred strong, were ordered to the poop, crannell-men were posted, and prompt to obey Blood's command at the very moment of impact. As a result, the foundering Arabella was literally kept afloat by the half-dozen grapples that in an instant moored her firmly to the Victoreuse.

Led now by Blood himself, they launched themselves upon the French like hounds upon the stag they have brought to bay. For fully half-an-hour that battle raged aboard the Frenchman. The French resisted stubbornly, and they had the advantage of numbers to encourage them. But for all their stubborn valor, they ended by being pressed back and back across the decks that were dangerously canted to starboard by the pull of the water-logged Arabella. The buccaneers fought with the desperate fury of men who know that retreat is impossible, for there was no ship to which they could retreat, and here they must prevail and make the Victoreuse their own, or perish.

Scandinavians Move to Prevent Bondage of Prohibition Rule

By Associated Press Leased Wire
 Copenhagen—Delegates from various Danish, Norwegian, Swedish and Finnish anti-prohibition organizations, mostly scientists and other professional men, met recently in Copenhagen to discuss measures to combat "the pernicious activities of American and native prohibition agents and provocateurs now working busily for foisting upon Europe the humiliating bondage of the hypocritical American prohibition law."

At a public meeting Major Hulten of Helsingfors declared that Finland was now the only absolutely dry country in Europe. Norway and Iceland being but semi-dry countries, their governments having been compelled to allow the importation of certain wines like port and madeira to avoid having their chief article of export dried codfish, barred from the wine-producing countries of the Mediterranean.

Prior to going dry Finland had Major Hulten asserted, a lower consumption of alcoholic beverages than

The Stubbornness of Style

Many a style, like the fabled cat, has nine lives. Shoot it; drown it; hang it; quarter it; smother it, yet up it bobs, meowing insistently and irrepressibly. Take turn-ups on trousers, for example. Not so far back, the fashion arbiters in London resolved that so-called "cuffs" on trousers for town and business wear must go. They have been going to go for some time, but they haven't gone yet. Indeed, the full 2-inch fold has supplanted the 1 1/2 turn-up in the preference of many young men. As a matter of fact, permanent "cuffs" will probably never be dropped from favor, no matter what self-appointed stylists may decree.

Then, again, take the single-breasted suit with the double-breasted waistcoat, as pictured in the accompanying sketch. This fashion is not new. In a way, it has run its course. Yet, youngsters are still partial to it, because it looks smart and becoming on the slender, well-set-up figure, the short, square waistcoat conveying the impression of greater height and length of limb. The pleats at the tops of the trousers are also a long familiar style. Nevertheless, you see them here; there; everywhere. Which goes to show, as the village octogenarian would say, shifting his quid from the right to the left cheek, that you can't kill a fashion people like merely by declaring it officially dead. The man-in-the-street has something to say about it.

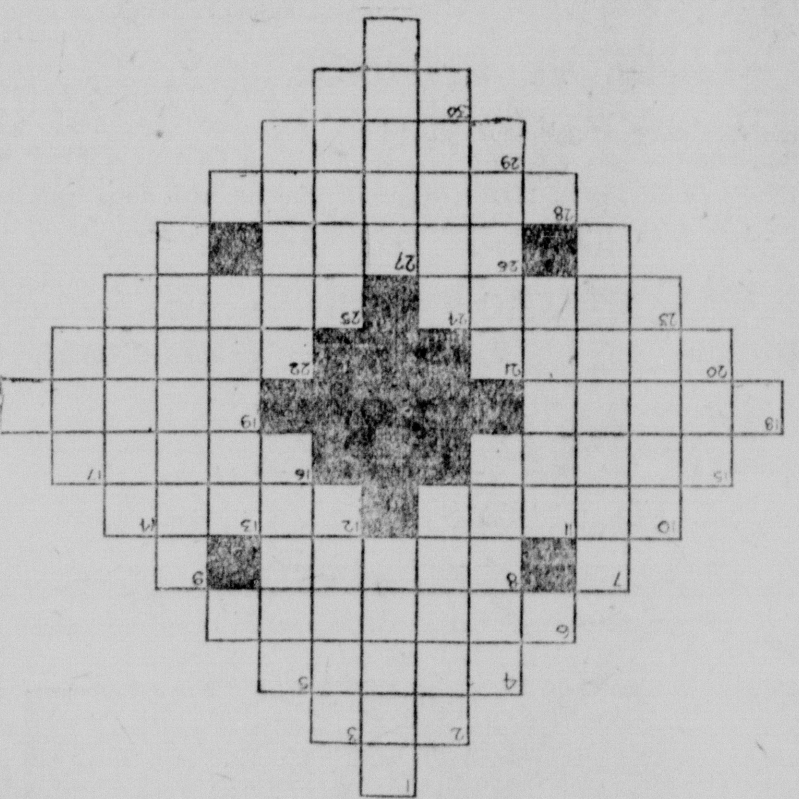

The 3-button coat, two to button, has the gradually rounded front and the newly revived peaked lapels. The waistcoat shows wide, curved, overlapping ones. The trousers are full-cut and free-draping. Be good enough to observe the boldly patterned cravat in regimental stripes; the smart shape of the white collar and the youthful, rakish angle at which the taper-crowned, broad-brimmed felt hat is worn, all of which are innovations of 1924-1925.

A correspondent, proud of his thick thatch, wishes to inquire if it is allowable to wear one's hair fairly long. Yes, if you belong to those who write, paint or sculpt—the world of Bohemia. No, if you are engaged in some prosy and practical pursuit, where long hair only attracts the attention of derision. Before a man can aspire to look well-dressed, he must be well-groomed. This means hair which knows its place and keeps it, that is, close to the head. In short, cut it short!

CORRIGAN
by EDMUND SNELL
I—CORRIGAN'S WAY

THREE little coasting-steamers Hau-fah, Dutch owned, made leisurely for the patch of green which showed on the horizon like jade in a sea of lapis-lazuli. The first mate, a truculent brigand in dirty whites and canvas shoes broken at the sides, was getting a motley collection of dark-skinned natives below hatches, protesting Malays with strange bundles; Japanese girls, broad-featured and giggling; Chinese coolies, some with flimsy boxes resembling violin-cases, others with nothing at all, because they had gambled away everything they had started with except a strip of rag at the loins; a tall Sikh with curling beard and effeminate swagger; Tamils, coal-black and wearing gold ornaments in their lips, noses and ears; chattering like a monkey colony, clutching their entire worldly possessions, they swarmed below decks to remain wedged like sweltering sardines, until the vessel chose to put to sea again.

The Dutch mate, the stump of a black cheeroot stuck in the corner of his great mouth, hastened their movements with none too delicate prods of an iron bar. Irene Matheson, reclining in a long cane chair on the narrow first-class deck under a patched awning, raised her eyes from the book she had been reading. There was a wealth of pity at her soul for these helpless creatures, formed like men and women, yet herded together like beasts of the field. Suddenly she gasped and leaned forward. Something that the ship's officer had done sent a shudder through her slender frame. In dumb protest, she looked at the broad white back of a man who stood by the rail. She could not see his face, but she thought that his sun-burned neck was unusually red and that the big brown hands which gripped the rope barrier had tightened their hold. It was as if a chord of sympathy had passed between these two. The slim girl in the chair felt that the silent message her brown eyes had flashed into space had come to rest in a highly sensitive receiving station encased in a suit of immaculate duck. The shoulders of the man she knew as Corrigan twitched. Her eyes widening with suppressed excitement, her tiny hands clutching at the sides of her chair, she saw him vault with the ease of an athlete on to the deck below. Half-a-dozen strides sufficed to cover the distance between him and the mate. She saw the iron bar descend pitilessly on the head of a native woman who had tried to secure a portion of her personal effects that had fallen as she staggered through that gaping hole, and then—Corrigan's great fist shot out and the first mate fell heavily, the bar rolling into the scuppers. Feeling like a fair spectator in a Roman arena, Mrs. Matheson clapped her hands.

The mate, crawling painfully to his feet, heard it and threw a malevolent glance in her direction. Swearing horribly, he reached out for the belaying-pin. Corrigan, who was bending over the injured woman, caught his eye. The fat fingers that groped for the bar ceased their fumbling and the little pig eyes of the Dutchman quailed suddenly beneath a steely gaze that spoke volumes. Mrs. Matheson had never heard Corrigan's voice. During the whole of the three days from Singapore, he had remained silent as the sphinx, gazing ceaselessly out to sea like a man weighed down by a brooding sorrow. Under this sudden call to action, the spell was broken.

"Leave that alone, my friend," advised Corrigan in measured tones. "You've gone a bit too far for my liking."

The mate gulped down something in his throat, shrugged his shoulders and remembered his position on the boat. Perhaps it was that he caught sight of the captain on his way from the bridge, for he stooped and picked up the bar, and Corrigan hit him again.

The skipper, his eyes ablaze, confronted the master of the situation. "What does this mean?" he demanded in very good English. Corrigan, square-jawed and clean-shaven, rose to his full height. He stood like a colossus, his hands resting easily on his hips, between the fat mate holding his bruised jaw and the Dutch girl, the white man's handkerchief knotted round her head, on which showed an ever-increasing patch of blood.

"I regret having to interfere with the discipline of your ship, Captain Lemburg," he said, "but to a humane man the situation explains itself."

The captain, broad and bearded, his white-topped cap cocked over one eye, his arms over-shoulder, like a giant, he thumped his great chest until it resounded like a drum.

"I'm captain here, Mr. —," he shouted.

"Corrigan's my name," put in the other calmly. "When I see a man hit a woman, black or white, the niceties of marine etiquette are lost on me. I see red. However, as it appears I owe you an apology—I give it; but I give no guarantee not to repeat my action in a similar case of brutality."

The skipper choked down his wrath.

"I see," he said thickly. "You will also apologize to Mr. Vanop." He jerked his head toward the mate who kept on feeling at his face as if to make sure his chin were still where Nature had originally placed it.

"Not on your life, my dear Lemburg," Corrigan assured him, turning on his heel to indicate that the affair was finished. "That's my way. In Perak, where I come from, they call it Corrigan's way—and you can't beat it, Captain, I give you my word."

He dropped on one knee by the side of the native woman, and the skipper, with a look at the broad back that suggested that it presented an enigma which to him, at least, was absolutely insoluble, ordered the first mate off. He clapped down the hatch cover, leaving the injured woman and Corrigan the sole occupants of that portion of the ship, and went back to the bridge to bring the

Zeppelins are No Longer Seen Flying Over Germany
 By Associated Press Leased Wire
 Friedrichshafen—Twenty Zeppelin plants have been destroyed since the end of the war under the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, and Friedrichshafen alone remains as a reminder of the time when a Zeppelin was as common a sight in Germany as is an airplane along the aerial routes of the United States.

Zeppelin stations were distributed all over Germany, and there was even one in Bukhara, which served as the point of operation in the Balkan theater of the world war. Eight stations belonged to the government, and were used exclusively for military purposes. The largest of these was at Cuxhaven. It included one hangar with a turntable arrangement which enabled Zeppelins to land safely even during a storm.

Among the centers where the Zeppelin company owned private stations were Düsseldorf, Potsdam, Frankfurt, Hanover and Dresden. The entente insisted upon their destruction also, fearing that, although they were private in character, they might any day be turned over to the military authorities.

Hau-fah safely into the still waters of Labuan.

Corrigan came to the first-class deck, slipping something into his pocket, and disappeared into the cool recesses of the corridor in search of a clean handkerchief. Irene Matheson met him at the door of her cabin. The tune that he had been whistling broke off abruptly at sight of her. His face assumed that mask-like expression it had worn throughout the trip. Mrs. Matheson hesitated.

"Mr. Corrigan," she said, the words forming themselves with an effort.

"Hullo?" He started as if something had struck him, as if the sound of a woman's voice jarred on his nerves.

"Oh—I just wanted to say—to thank you—for what you did. I think it was absolutely splendid."

"Oh!—That!" He relaxed somewhat and faced her squarely. "I've been so wrapped up in myself, you know, that I forgot for the moment you were there. Women haven't treated me too kindly in this world; I suppose I've been out in the wilds too long; I've lost polish—and women-folk haven't a lot of use for the unfinished article. But, there are some things I can't stand—and that was one of 'em."

"I know," said Mrs. Matheson sympathetically. "Perhaps some women are exacting, but there are times, Mr. Corrigan, when they look round for a man; times when there are wrongs that only a real man can right. I wanted you to hit that man."

Corrigan gasped.

"You wanted me to?" he stammered. "I've forgotten a lot of things in these weary years, Mrs. Matheson; but I sort of remembered when I was halfway through with it, that I was guilty of a breach of etiquette; I felt I was doing something that isn't done. I mean, I suppose I ought to have checked my primitive impulses until you had retired to your cabin."

Irene Matheson flushed. Unwillingly, she found herself comparing this man with the husband she was going back to.

"The primitive woman in me called aloud for all that was primitive in man," she said simply, "and found it. I'm infinitely grateful to you, Mr. Corrigan." She held out a slim hand and Corrigan, stepping forward impetuously, took it in his brown paw.

"Are you going ashore?" he inquired, letting his blue eyes rest for a moment on hers.

"If you will take me," she replied, looking down.

He found her ten minutes later, talking to the brown girl on the fore-deck. As he approached them, he saw that a paper parcel had appeared from somewhere, and the scarcely perceptible breeze which blew from the shore brought to him the unmistakable scent of Eau de Cologne.

They crossed the gangway together on to the somewhat rickety landing-stage. He called back to a stooping figure on the ship's deck: "How long we got here?"

"Twenty-four hours, at least, sir," was the reply.

"Thanks."

They had got beyond a group of prosperous Chinese merchants when the first mate looked up. He shook his fist after them and swore venomously. Presently he aimed a kick at a native hand, and chuckled hoarsely to himself. He surveyed an enormous watch with a rusted nickel case and a cracked dial on which the sun and moon played an important part. He stuffed it back in his pocket and looked anxiously up at the bridge. The skipper was engaged in earnest conversation with the Chinese supercargo.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE HAD BUT ONE GIRL AND SHE IS STILL HIS ONLY SWEETHEART

Northampton, Mass.—Burnings of the love fire in the bosom of calm, cautious Calvin Coolidge may be hard to imagine.

Yet Eros pricked the heart of the solemn man who presides in Washington—once.

The girl is still his sweetheart today.

Back in 1902, when Coolidge was a young lawyer here, and Grace Goodhue a teacher in the Clark School for the Deaf and Blind, they met.

Coolidge had spied the girl as he looked out of his window. A mutual friend introduced them.

Northampton was a small place, and news spread fast.

Cal was a courtier.

But he was not a fervid lover. He took Miss Goodhue on walks and he made punctilious calls upon her. He took her to none of the dances, for the young man was too bashful to dance.

Lucy Advises Him

One day Coolidge dropped into the shop of James Lucy for a chat. Lucy was—and still is—the village shoemaker and philosopher.

"Look here, young man," Lucy said to Coolidge, pretending to be very cross. "You aren't getting anywhere."

"You want to walk closer to Grace. Don't go up the street as if you didn't know her, for some of these other young men around town will come and walk between you."

"When you walk home with her tonight, walk very close. And when you get in her parlor, sit very close to her on the lounge."

"First look at her shoes. Tell her what pretty feet she has. Then look at her skirt. Tell her what a pretty dress she has on."

"Then look into her eyes. Tell her what wonderful eyes she has, and how you know she's going to make some young man a wonderful wife, and how you hope to be that man."

Whether Coolidge followed this advice or not will never be known. But a short time later their engagement was announced.

Cal Knew Silent

But Coolidge knew little of the delicacies of dealings with the fair sex. He did not know that it was his place to ask her to name the wedding day.

The school term closed. Miss Goodhue went to her home in Vermont, greatly puzzled. She did not know whether she should stay there and work on her trousseau, or whether she should make arrangements to return to the school the following term.

While she was in this quandary, Coolidge appeared at her home, dressed in his best clothes.

Miss Goodhue's father met him at the door.

"Up here on a business trip?" he asked.

"No-o, not a business trip," Coolidge replied, shifting to his other foot. "On a pleasure trip."

"No-o, that is, not exactly," Coolidge replied. "You see, I came here to marry your daughter."

This surprised Goodhue.

"Why, I don't think she's ready," he exclaimed.

"Well," said Coolidge, his natural calm returning to him as he took a seat on the porch. "I'll wait then."

It may have been sudden news to the girl that they were to be married right away, but she was prepared for the ceremony in a few months. They were married on Oct. 4, 1905.

And, say their friends, they are sweethearts yet.

of my lovely Hollywood home, I am conscious of the song of the birds, the fragrance of the flowers and above all the permeating golden flood of sunshine.

I am happy, happy, happy. There, I have written it three times. Do you remember how I used to always make you say you loved me three times? It always seemed to me that the number three had a certain magic. Having said "I love you, Paula" once, you might possibly forget—saying "I love you, Paula" twice made me yours for I believed you would always remember—and when you said, "I love you, Paula" for the third time I felt that you were always mine and neither of us would forget.

Perhaps it was not all in my imagination, perhaps you did love me, for I know that I loved you well enough to entrust you with my body, my mind and my soul—there you see the magic number of three again.

Now you mean so little to me that as I wrote "mon ami" at the top of this page I could not visualize your face, I could not remember the tone of your voice outside of a dozen men who are really only acquaintances I have met out here.

I think perhaps I have over-stated that last thought for we can never be acquaintances after what has gone before. I know I am your friend and I think you are mine, but what I have been trying to say to you that you really are not a necessary part of my life or even my thoughts any more.

Why am I writing all this to you, you probably are asking again, because Mrs. Summers has just told me that little Jack, your child and mine, has been given the income of a large block of steel stock.

I am not sure that whether Fate is a great joker or a fairly god-mother and I can't help wondering just the same why my baby which I brought into the world in such overwhelming sorrow has been signaled out for such great reward.

Illinois Faces Big Shortage Seed Clover

Illinois faces the greatest shortage of cloverseed in its history and the farmers' salvation is to grow alfalfa, according to a statement by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The statement is based on government figures, just made public, which show this year's production to be the lowest on record.

Production was poor in 1923, the total in the state dropping from 315,000 bushels in 1922 to 128,000 bushels. This year the production is only 110,000 bushels or 86 per cent of last year.

In its statement on the cloverseed shortage the Institute says: "The crop report just issued shows that the total production of cloverseed in the United States this year is estimated at 817,000 bushels as compared with 1,100,000 last year and a five-year average of 1,610,000 bushels. Last year approximately 24,000,000 pounds of cloverseed were imported to make up the deficiency in America, but Europe has a shortage this year also and probably will have little cloverseed for the United States.

"Red clover seed prices already are high and likely to go higher. Fortunately, both alfalfa and sweet clover have produced larger crops than usual this year, alfalfa being one-third larger, so farmers of the nation are urged to seed with alfalfa. It will be more economical than to practice thin seeding which is so frequently done when cloverseed is scarce as now."

Buy them early. Mail them early. Prepare your list now and be sure no one is forgotten. Then come here and make your selection while the stock is fresh and complete. Our full line is now ready. B. F. Shaw Printing Co., Dixon, Ill.

LETTER FROM PAULA PERIER TO JOHN ALDEN PRESCOTT

Mon Ami: It is a long time since I have put those words to a letter to you, my friend. When I wrote them today I was surprised that they did not make my heart beat one second faster. I think I am regaining my sense of humor. I thought I had lost it forever for when I wrote those words at the top of this letter they simply meant to me their simple translation, "my friend."

I was greatly surprised when I found out that this was so. I remember that when I used to write them I got all quivery and my heart would not behave itself.

Then, Jack, I lived only for the moment shorter or longer when I should see you daily. Then, it seemed to me that hell could hold no greater torture than to live outside the vision of your eyes.

"Why is Paula Perier writing like this to me now?" you are asking yourself now.

I am not really writing it to you, Jack, I am writing it to myself. I want to put it on this nice clean sheet of paper and see how it looks. I want to demonstrate to myself that although I have not seen you for a long time and it probably will be a longer time before I look upon your face, I am happy.
